

Who is Maggie Philbin?

Maggie Philbin has worked in radio and television for over 30 years on a wide range of science, medical and technology programmes.

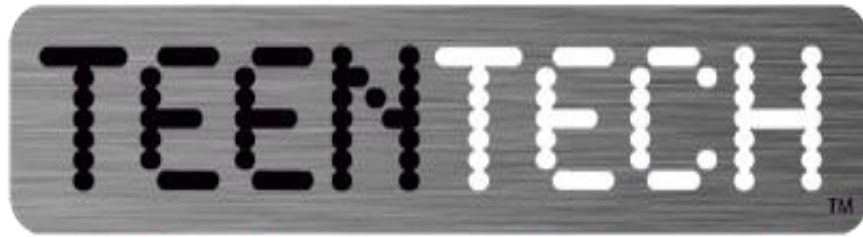

She has been a presenter on the TV series Bang Goes The Theory and is a regular reporter on Inside Out but began her career on Swap Shop and Tomorrow's World.

She has covered stories all over the world, from earthquake prediction systems in Iceland, to wave power technology in Norway, to possibly the most dangerous system for rescuing people from ski cable cars in Switzerland!

Many of the everyday gadgets we now take for granted were demonstrated on live television for the very first time by Maggie – the first mobile phone, the first car navigation system, the first fax machine, even the first supermarket barcode reader.

She is co-founder and CEO of Teen Tech CIC, an award winning organisation helping young people, their parents and teachers understand more about the real opportunities in Science and Technology.
